Bart Beaver's Mistake

Sunning himself alongside a cool brook one fine sunny morning, Bart Beaver was thinking; "How tiresome it is, day after day, to be eating the same old foods; nuts, herbs and grass. I think I'll do something about it."

He decided to call on some of his friends in the animal kingdom and explain an idea that had come into his mind.

He stretched himself, yawned and then hustled over to the home of his good friend, Whitey Rabbit.

After exchanging pleasantries with Whitey, Bart said "I've been thinking, do you get tired of eating the same foods, day in and day out? "I know you love your carrots, lettuce, and cabbage-leaves but wouldn't you like something else for a change?"

"I have often thought of that myself," replied Whitey, "have you any ideas?"

"Yes, I have, I've been thinking of having my wife, Beauty, bake a large cake; in fact large enough to feed us, and all of our friends. We would need everyone's help in gathering the materials.

Whitey thought it was a splendid idea and agreed to offer any assistance.

They both decided to call on their mutual friend, Cecil Chipmunk.

When they arrived at Cecil's house, the door was open, but no one was at home. Knowing that Cecil wouldn't mind, they entered and sat in the kitchen. Bart observed that there was a large closet filled with acorns.

Upon looking closer he noticed that there was no other food, just acorns.

He turned to Whitey and said, "I'll beetcha that Cecil and his family are sick and tired of eating those same old acorns, day in and day out. I'm sure they'll like my idea of a big cake; particularly, the children."

Just as he finished speaking, Cecil walked in the door.

"Hello Whitey, hello Bart", Cecil exclaimed. "I was out in the woods gathering some grass for my family. You know, fellows, we get sick of eating the same food, every day of the year."

"Well, I guess we arrived at the right time", said Whitey.

"Bart has an idea that should appeal to you."

Bart explained about the big cake and how each one would do his share in gathering the materials. Cecil thought it was a splendid suggestion and pledged his family's co-operation. He also mentioned that while he had never tasted cake, he had a cousin who lived next to a large bakery, who many times had tasted that delicacy. He described the cake in such detail that his mouth started to water.

After the discussion had ended, the three of them decided to call on another good friend, Solly Skunk.

At one time Solly Skunk and his family didn't have any friends, because of their peculiar odor. Their three children were very lonesome. Everytime they would play with the other children, the children would hold their noses and run away. This worried Solly very much. One day he read a magazine article about a famous doctor who could remove the odor. He immediately contacted the doctor and after making an appointment, the doctor performed an operation on all of the family which was very successful. At last the odor was gone and now Solly and his family were on friendly terms with all of the neighbors and their children.

As Whitey, Bart and Cecil arrived at Solly Skunk's house, they overheard his wife Sophie say: "Solly, I wish you would go out in the forest with the boys and get some food for supper."

"Hello, Solly, Sophie", said the trio as they entered the house. "We heard you mention food", said Bart, "and that's just what we came to talk about."

After drinking some grape-juice which the Skunks had kindly offered, Bart explained about the big cake. They were thrilled with the idea and agreed to do their part.

Before they went home they had contacted all of their friends including: Mac Mouse, Pat Partridge, Walter Weasel, Golly Gopher, Sam Sparrow and Pete Pigeon.

The next afternoon all of the animals arrived in the big forest for the planning of the great event.

FUNNY ANIMALS

"We will bake the cake on Sunday afternoon," Bart said, "as none of you will be working, and the children will be home from school. That will give you three days to gather the materials. I will now adjourn the meeting and hope to see you on Sunday afternoon."

They all departed to their respective homes full of excitement and anticipation for the great day, the following Sunday.

The next two days were very busy ones for the animals and their children. They hustled bustled, hither and yon, their hearts filled with excitement. The animals who could fly, such as Pat Partridge, Sam Sparrow, and Pete Pigeon, obtained their materials much faster than those who had to walk. Whitey Rabbit went to the grocer and bought the baking powder; Cecil dug plenty of salt at the salt-mines; Solly cut sugar-canies from the nearby fields; Mac gathered the vanilla beans; Pat got milk from the dairy and also purchased the butter; Solly and Sam obtained the eggs, each carrying some so they would not get broken.

Walter had to travel quite a distance to get the shortening. No one seemed to have any on hand, until one store-keeper advised him where it could be gotten. He was told to go to a house, about two miles distant, owned by a Mr. Eddie Nelson and his wife. Mrs. Nelson was famed many miles around for her wonderful shortening bread, which she prepared herself.

After asking for directions from some kind people, Walter finally found the Nelson residence. He rang the bell and as Mrs. Nelson appeared, he said, "How do-you-do, my name is Walter Weasel, and I've come to ask you if you would sell me some shortening." As Mrs. Nelson invited him in she replied, "I will be more than glad to sell you some, as I always keep a large supply on hand. My husband, Eddie Nelson, is a singer, and when he comes home tired at night, he sure does welcome my shortening bread!"

After Mrs. Nelson had wrapped the shortening, Walter thanked her from the bottom of his heart and departed for his home, much relieved.

The great day arrived at last and in the afternoon, all of the families packed their supplies, gathered the children and made haste to Bart Beaver's. When they arrived, after much shouting and welcoming, they noticed that Bart had built a large brick-oven to bake the cake. Mrs. Beaver had a large receptacle and as each one arrived, she took the ingredients and started to mix the cake.

Bart assisted her and as she held the flour-sifter he started pouring. The flour seemed quite lumpy but with a little patience, the job was finally accomplished.

The cake was then put into the oven and of course the children were very much excited, asking such questions as: "How long will it take?" "Boy, I'll bet that's gonna taste good!" "Golly, look at the size of it!" Several times Bart had to chase the kids, as they kept trying to peek into the oven, and he was afraid they might get burned.

Within a little while the air started to smell sweet, and there were many "Oh's" and "Ah's." The mouths of some of the children started to drip, as most of them had never tasted cake before.

The great moment had arrived at last, when Mrs. Beaver, repeatedly sticking a broom-straw into the cake, announced that it was done! She took it out of the oven and placed it on the big table to cool. The children kept trying to stick their fingers into it but Mrs. Beaver shooed them away. Some of the kids yelled, "Let's eat it right away, don't bother with the icing." Mrs. Beaver calmed them down and told them to be patient.

When it was sufficiently cooled, Bart requested everyone to take seats around the table and he would cut the cake.

He took a large knife off the table and started to cut. The knife seemed to bounce right off the top of the cake. He tried again but with the same result. The cake actually felt like stone! The crowd looked on with puzzled expressions. Finally, Bart had an idea as to what had happened. When he went to the miller's to purchase the flour he remembered that he had forgotten his glasses. The miller told him to help himself to the flour which was in a store-room. Bart had noticed that the floor had been dug up and the workmen were laying a new concrete one. He had picked up the bags of flour and left.

When he couldn't cut the cake he looked at the ground for an empty sack. He picked it up and held it to the light.

In big letters on the front of the sack were the words: "PORTLAND CEMENT."

The crowd groaned with disappointment and Mrs. Beaver was flabbergasted.

Sensing the tension of the crowd, she yelled, "Now don't let it upset you, good friends! We have enough material left to bake another cake and we will all meet here next Sunday." "However, this time I will make sure Bart has his glasses on when he goes to the miller!"

Everyone agreed, but they were now so hungry their regular food was going to taste very good indeed!

"After all," Bart said, "cake is really only a good dessert after all!"
